Chapter 1 by Danny Rerucha

You crouch down and shield your eyes from the sun in an attempt to see what lies below. You hold your breath in order to better hear the sounds of running water far beneath your feet.

You are still holding your breath when the steel hinges holding the grate in place start to moan under your weight. The hinges snap, the grate collapses, and you fall into darkness.

Chapter 2 by dclarkwilson

As you fall into this secluded place, you realize that nothing can be more dreadful. No pain, no suffering and no grief could be so dark. Suddenly, you awake. There you see the darkness slowly creeping away as the sun begins to show its face. You come to reality that it was only a dream. Was it really?

Chapter 3 by intellikat

Yes.

You wake up, and thank heavens, you're just a regular Market-Q employee, asleep in the breakroom once again.
